

GTM Strategy Module 3: Positioning, Value Pillars, and Narrative

Step 1 · Define Your Fro/To Market Shift

FROM: Life before Roamly Groups	TO: Life after Roamly Groups
Organizing group travel used to feel like a stressful second job. Trip leaders acted like administrative managers—juggling WhatsApp polls, chasing payments, logging manual bank transfers, and shouldering all the financial risk on their personal cards.	Group trip coordination becomes a seamless, streamlined process. Lead organizers can easily establish plans, enforce timelines, and shift financial responsibility entirely to the platform. Since organizers face zero personal credit risk and participants complete transactions through a frictionless 15-second guest checkout flow, cart conversions turn into completed bookings effortlessly. Furthermore, Roamly significantly reduces research time by enabling organizers to select from curated options and popular, community-upvoted itineraries.

Step 2 · Identify Your Audiences

Total number of audiences that need their own message: 3

Target Audience	Justification for Unique Pillar
1. The Lead Organizer (Maid of Honor, Birthday Lead)	Primary buyer and curation authority. Their acute pain issocial awkwardness (debt collecting) and personal credit risk. They must be motivated to pick the trip and enforce the deadline.

2. The Participants (Bridesmaids, Group of Friends)	Growth-driving, viral participants. Driven by rapid execution and complete financial independence, they seek a shared environment to cast votes on plans and monitor itineraries and expenses transparently, ensuring any issues are addressed proactively.
3. The Host Community (The 12,000 Vetted Experts)	Supply-side marketplace liquidity. Their value is calendar predictability and income security. They must be motivated to accept 24-hour holds in exchange for guaranteed high-margin private buyouts.

Step 3 • Draft a Pillar Per Audience

Audience 1: The Lead Organizer (Maid of Honor, Birthday Lead)

The primary buyer. I need motivation to pick the trip and enforce the deadline.
